HAIDERS DRUM MAPLESS LOCKE MILLS, 22-3

More records for their Oxford County League colleagues to shoot at were set up by the Bethel Raiders on the wind-swept field at Locke Mills Sunday afternoon.

In defeating the home boys 22 to 3 in seven innings of highly unorthodox baseball a new single inning scoring high 13 in the 7th was established and Capt. Crockett's brace of homers in the same inning to the league premier slugger marks a date.

All the Raiders circled the bases for pay-off matters and all hit safely at least once with the exception of Walt Robertson who was hit but continued on to score and Billy Morgan who beat out a batted third strike and walked.

Shane's Raiders approached the plate from the on deck circle in the final seventh. Thurston returned from the third base after his first and second in the downpour of last game's hit and a third in the eighth of the 4th inning and started to trace and the dismay of the umpire as he was called out and tagged to end a previous engagement.

When the last started on base complete was recorded for garden duty in the seventh and was either a dropper or volunteer for mound work after 10 runs had been scored with one out. Thurston's first came to late him gained the tag in the center field and for a home run. Andy Walter and Robert Smith singled in the same general direction. Billy Morgan stood greatly fascinated and mildly surprised as three fast balls in rapid succession landed the batter with multiple strikes to end the excitement. The home team failed to score in their half.

Mr. Money was returned for duty as another. After changing his equipment he looked over the field and failing to find a quorum to playing position with great persistence of mind he landed the game to be over.

The Raiders remain the tonight but will meet the Virginia Lancers at Thurston Field Sunday afternoon.

HERO of the Month

Left as dead on a battlefield in Germany, Louis A. Miller, today is very much alive and fighting the battle of Kentucky farmers for better living conditions, water, sewage and land conservation.

"It is my belief that Miller's postwar rehabilitation is even more remarkable than his war record," said his former commanding officer, John J. Thibodeau, lieutenant colonel, U.S. Cavalry, now a science instructor at West Point.

He had been so badly wounded that army surgeons shook their heads and labeled him a "museum of pathology."

Miller's wartime record was one of courage, leadership and devotion to duty. His civilian record in fighting back from the very brink of the grave—a long and lonely battle, by himself—is even more commendable and worthy of praise and honor.

It is for this meritorious ability to overcome these serious wartime handicaps and become a self-sustaining citizen that the Disabled American Veterans has selected him as "The Hero of the Month." The selection is part of a DAV national program to honor each month a seriously disabled veteran who has successfully rehabilitated himself.

The experience of three men and thousands of others, according to David M. Brown, national DAV commander, emphasizes the importance of safeguarding the rehabilitation program for disabled veterans and not letting false economy moves wreck the program.

Miller, a native of Louisville, Ky., and a graduate and star football player on the St. Xavier School team of that city, served with Troop C of the 4th Cavalry, U.S. Cavalry (Mechanized), He was recommended for battlefield appointment of the grade of second lieutenant for leadership displayed as a platoon sergeant in the battle of Hurtgen Forest. But he did not receive news of his appointment until three months later—two days before he was wounded.

On March 31, 1945, after crossing the Rhine, Miller, while leading a platoon encountered a stubborn roadblock. He decided to break through himself in his armed jeep. He succeeded in smashing through the leading German elements but his driver was killed and he was wounded. The terrific machine gun fire of the enemy overturned the jeep into the ditch. But in breaking this upper crust of opposition the American tanks were able to pass through the opening.

"I went forward and saw Lt. Miller and his driver dead (I assumed) beside the road," said Colonel John McDonald, then commanding the 4th Cavalry. "Miller was terribly wounded in the back neck and head, in fact he appeared to be shot to pieces. Both were reported killed in action."

Miller was unconscious for fifteen days. Although an operation was performed on his brain there was no hope for his recovery. In fact of that when his wounds were treated doctors were positive he would remain the rest of his life in a wheel chair. He was paralyzed on his right side and his voice was gone. He learned to walk and he learned to talk. He began to sing with the radio and at first he stuttered and stammered but he soon learned to speak with a drawl. After two years he had sufficient reliance to ask for a discharge. He was discharged with total disability rating.

Miller took an extension course at the University of Louisville under Public Law 16 where he studied advertising, typing and business administration. He went to work for the Kentucky Department of Agriculture and is now advertising manager of the Kentucky Electric Co.-New.

EASY DOES IT

PHIN, CRISP CHOCOLATE wafers make a dainty dessert if they are spread with sweetened vanilla flavored whipped cream and stacked in a refrigerator tray. Let chill thoroughly, then slice diagonally and serve.

Small cream puff shells make a nice entree for a bride-elect's luncheon when they're filled with a salad mixture of chopped chicken, olives, toasted almonds and celery mixed with mayonnaise.

Another dainty idea for a bridal luncheon uses slices of avocado arranged petal fashion on a nest of watercress. Place a mound of strawberries in the center. Serve well chilled with sweet French dressing.

Trim sandwiches to serve with salads can be made by slicing a loaf of bread lengthwise. Spread each slice with a mixture of canned cream of mushroom soup and chopped ripe olives. Roll and fasten with a toothpick. Bake in a hot oven for 10 minutes; serve hot.

Plain cup cakes can go to any party if they're topped with whipped cream into which has been folded some strawberry jam.

When you're serving juice as an appetizer, try these dainty canapés with it. Mash cream cheese with cream to moisten and add to it some chopped sautéed mushrooms. Spread toasted rounds of bread with this mixture and broil until light brown.

A delightful beverage to be served at a reception includes a mixture of iced pineapple and apricot juice topped with lemon sherbet.

Cranberry and pineapple juice make a delicious starter for a luncheon. Top with pineapple or orange sherbet to add the "frosting."

A PEEK AT THE STARS

by LYNN CONNELLY

MUCH HOLLYWOOD conjecture on who will be on the air next fall, and for what network... At the present, it appears that most shows will be back in the same groove... Possible exception is Fibber McGee and Molly, reported ready to retire—and not interested in TV, at least not at this writing...

Groucho Marx is the one man with a definite future... Exceedingly popular on radio, he is the most sought-after man in TV at the moment with two networks vying for his services... With his sharp wit, a natural for the new medium.

Bob Hawk and his bride of six weeks returned from a flying trip to Paris and are living in their Beverly Hills apartment... Des Amecbe will do a summer show out of Chicago—where he first broke in all those years ago...

Gene Awley's first TV film was made with live music, the first time the ban has been lifted by Union Chief Petrillo... Fred Allen has been signed to make comedy records... Garry Moore is moving his home back east now that he's signed a long-term contract with CBS.

"LATTER CHATTER"

CAPITOL—Gordon MacRae has made two supper albums consisting of selections from popular operettas... Both use Paul Weston's orchestra for background music and in several sides he is combined with lovely Lucille Norman... One album is "New Moon," in which he does a sterling job with the roosting "Squint-Hearted Men" and "Softy, As in a Morning Sun."

"The Wanting You" duet is nothing and beautiful... In the other album, Gordon and Lucille do a nice job of presenting that favorite, "The Vagabond King" with such wonderful selections as "Song of the Vagabonds," "Only a Rose," "Some Day," "Huguetta Waltz" and others. These are musts for record collectors.

THE STORY OF THE UGLY DUCKLING

DUCKLING has perhaps touched more hearts than any other fairy tale ever written. This is because most of us as children had moments of feeling unappreciated when the tale of the despised duckling who turned out to be a swan was balm to our smarting egos.

Now these temporary moments of feeling unappreciated to the family are inevitable and perhaps do us more good than harm, for can you imagine anything less desirable than growing up feeling worthy every second? No self-searching, no need for resolving to improve oneself—in our opinion that would be like living in a climate where there were never any weather changes.

But feeling that one is an ugly duckling for days and weeks and years at a time is something else again. Such an experience may do a swan no harm but it is soul scarring to a human being. That is why parents should try to make their less attractive or less gifted children feel as important and welcome as their handsomer or smarter brothers and sisters. This is done by bringing out and making much of their good points, but not in so obvious a way as to make the child realize that you are compensating for shortcomings of personality.

Just such heavy-handed methods were once used by conscientious parents. For example, the homely child was dressed more plainly than the others, hair pulled back in the most unbecoming manner, and to make up for this, virtues were extolled. "Ellen isn't pretty, but she is so good to children!" or "Bob is unattractive but ne gets as in arithmetic." Generations of children soothed inside over these well meant remarks.

Taking this matter of looks alone, it is possible nowadays to spare a child most of the distress of being less well favored than other children. Youngsters aren't particularly critical of their own features, but they can be miserably conscious of an unbecoming dress, especially if they don't like the color or the length. Extra thought, a little more money, considerably more time spent in dressing the least pretty of your children will often save that child the knowledge of being different.

But won't he or she have to learn someday that others in the family got most of the good looks? Certainly, but by then they can take it if in childhood they have felt equally cherished. And by then, too, there's so much they can do about it! All a homely girl has to do today is wear more enchanting hats, bigger earrings, a more stunning hair-do or more carefully chosen colors than her sisters to be considered the smartest looking in the family.

For it isn't the fact of having a big nose or spreading mouth or freckles that harms a child's ego. It's the parents' unspoken disappointment, "Oh, dear, Sally would have Aunt Nellie's ghastly nose," that brings realization of their plight. The least attractive child I ever knew was treated by her mother as if she were beautiful. I don't mean in a silly, vain sense, but with the same emphasis on installing graciousness of manner, care in grooming and awareness of good taste that the mother would have devoted to prettier child.

Wrong guy on the line

LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

I am, of all things, a do-gooder. I admit it. But I am sailing under no false banner, where I claim all my do-gooding is just for the other guy, exclusive. There is no substitute for the truth.

I am on this subject on account 600 professional do-gooders met here recently for three days and told how they are bleeding, dying, and suffering for the welfare of the rest of us poor souls. And now to blurt out the truth, these 600 are on the generous payrolls of the State or the Counties or the Colleges. "Welfare" is their bread and butter - they must make "welfare" click, just like if you sell tires or ice boxes, etc. You boost your goods.

My do-gooding today is for the protection of my insurance - fire and life. And since just about everybody has insurance and wants to stay safe - we can all get in together and make a double-jointed job of our do-good endeavor and camouflage.

Here's how. When you hear some political gent harangue about cutting all big or man's size business down to boy's size, pick up a postcard. Tell him your insurance company depends for its income upon the interest it gets on the bonds of banks in many and various big banks. Tell him to lay-off - he is deteriorating the safety of your insurance, his insurance, too. That will waste him up.
